Your team experiences what you have not examined.

Someone questions your decision, and you hear a question about your worth.

An assumption to examine

Confidence needs the room to confirm it.

Look at one ordinary moment.

A manager explains a decision again before asking which part the team questions.

Observe before deciding.

Notice when you ask for input and when you ask for reassurance.

Choose one response to practice.

In one difficult conversation, name the feeling privately before deciding how to respond.

Look back together.

Did you listen to the question, or defend your identity? Save this for your next conversation.
