The conversation you are waiting for may be yours to begin.

Everyone can see the same problem, and everyone is waiting for someone else to name it.

An assumption to examine

Leadership starts when someone gives you a title.

Look at one ordinary moment.

A meeting ends with unclear ownership, and one teammate asks who will take the next step.

Observe before deciding.

Look for a moment when people wait for permission to contribute.

Choose one response to practice.

Name one unresolved question and offer a first step without claiming authority you do not have.

Look back together.

Did your first step help other people participate? Save this for your next conversation.
