Going First: what do you notice?

Five moments to examine with your team.

People notice an issue but wait for the manager to name it.

Describe a specific example before deciding what it means.

You withhold an idea because it is outside your title.

Describe a specific example before deciding what it means.

A meeting ends without anyone clarifying the next step.

Describe a specific example before deciding what it means.

You confuse taking initiative with taking over.

Describe a specific example before deciding what it means.

People agree privately and stay silent together.

Describe a specific example before deciding what it means.

Choose one moment.

Look for a moment when people wait for permission to contribute. Name one unresolved question and offer a first step without claiming authority you do not have.

Bring the observation into the room.

Bring a moment when you waited for someone else to begin. We will examine what going first could look like. Save these questions.