You explained it. What did they understand?

You finish explaining an assignment, and the work comes back differently from what you expected.

An assumption to examine

Saying something clearly guarantees it was understood.

Look at one ordinary moment.

Two people leave the same meeting with different ideas about the deadline and the next step.

Observe before deciding.

Compare the instruction you gave with the understanding the other person describes.

Choose one response to practice.

Ask the other person to describe the next step in their own words, and invite them to question yours.

Look back together.

What did you change after hearing what was received? Save this for your next conversation.