Can someone use the feedback you just gave?

You tell someone they are unreliable and wonder why the conversation becomes defensive.

An assumption to examine

A judgment about someone gives them a clear path to improve.

Look at one ordinary moment.

Replace a character label with the missed commitment, its effect, and a question about what happened.

Observe before deciding.

Notice whether your feedback names behavior or defines the person.

Choose one response to practice.

Describe one observable behavior and ask what support or agreement is needed for the next attempt.

Look back together.

Could the person identify what to work on without defending who they are? Save this for your next conversation.
