Your job description does not describe your whole team.

You know what someone delivers, but not what they are trying to build in their life.

An assumption to examine

A person's role tells you everything relevant about them.

Look at one ordinary moment.

A one-to-one covers tasks and deadlines but never asks what the person wants to develop.

Observe before deciding.

Notice which dimension gets attention and which gets overlooked.

Choose one response to practice.

Ask one person what capability they want to develop and discuss one appropriate opportunity to practice.

Look back together.

What did you learn that the job description could not tell you? Save this for your next conversation.