The meeting after the meeting is costing you attention.

The room is quiet until the meeting ends. Then the real concerns come out.

An assumption to examine

Leaving culture alone has no cost.

Look at one ordinary moment.

A concern raised late requires work to be repeated after people were reluctant to name it earlier.

Observe before deciding.

Track an actual example of rework, withheld information or repeated clarification without inventing a cost.

Choose one response to practice.

Ask what makes one recurring concern difficult to raise, then change one response within your responsibility.

Look back together.

What did you invest in, and what behavior followed? Save this for your next conversation.