Invest or Pay: what do you notice?

Five moments to examine with your team.

Important concerns appear after the meeting.

Describe a specific example before deciding what it means.

People repeat work because a question came too late.

Describe a specific example before deciding what it means.

The same conflict absorbs another check-in.

Describe a specific example before deciding what it means.

You budget for training but not for practicing together.

Describe a specific example before deciding what it means.

A concern is welcomed in principle and punished in the moment.

Describe a specific example before deciding what it means.

Choose one moment.

Track an actual example of rework, withheld information or repeated clarification without inventing a cost. Ask what makes one recurring concern difficult to raise, then change one response within your responsibility.

Bring the observation into the room.

Bring one repeated workplace pattern that consumes time or attention. We will examine where you can invest differently. Save these questions.
