Elevate You calls to action

Context matched options • Draft for review • 15 October 2026

Use one main next step in each asset. Keep the full interview as the primary destination for educational podcast posts. Use an organizational inquiry when the copy has made the team-level problem clear.

Decision ownership

If decisions keep coming back to you, let’s talk about where the work is getting stuck and whether Elevate You’s organizational work is a fit.

Leadership under pressure

If the same patterns keep showing up across your team, let’s get specific about what is happening and what you want to change. Start a conversation with Elevate You.

Team culture and accountability

What does the standard look like in the way your team works every day? Talk with Elevate You about the culture or leadership challenge you are working through.

Customer experience

If the customer experience is being shaped by the way your team works together, let’s start there. Talk with Elevate You about what your team needs.

Keep individual and organizational routes clear

Newsletter

Default: use the full episode as the main action. For an audience focused on organizational leadership, an optional closing is: “If the same patterns are showing up across your team, let’s talk about where the work gets stuck. Email me at matt@goelevateyou.com to start a conversation about Elevate You.”

Website article

Use the decision-ownership invitation at the end of the article. Link the words “Talk with Elevate You” to the published contact address. Keep the source interview link available alongside it.

LinkedIn and Instagram

Use the full episode for the first release. Where the post explicitly discusses a team-level problem, replace the main CTA with the relevant organizational invitation rather than add several competing requests.

Individual coaching remains separate

Matt’s Identity Audit belongs to his personal coaching route. Elevate You’s Ripple Diagnostic is an organizational entry point. Do not rename or merge them. The planned individual cohort and content tool are not presented here as open for enrollment.
